

Jodie Pully

I started participating in ECW with my mother and the other ladies of our church when I turned 18. I specifically remember hosting an annual meeting. My mother died when I was 33 and I found much comfort and support from the ladies of ECW. We still remain close even though we don't worship at the same church.

I was asked to serve on the ECW Diocesan Board when I was 35 (12 years ago) and have found much fulfillment by the work we do. Although, the issues in the larger church can be distracting, our focus has been to love the Lord and nurture each other as we focus on our "Call to Action" which is women and children in crisis.

I know my mother would love the work we are doing now but especially the wonderful relationships that have developed out of being part of Episcopal Church Women.
